SATURDAY MORNING, JANUARY 14, 1860.

A NATIONAL PERIL. A letter from Mr. Mechi, the well known English agriculturist, to the London Times, on the importance of saving the sewerage of towns for agricultural purposes, has called forth from Baron Liebig a letter, printed in the New York Times, in which he adds to the arguments of Mr. Mechi some of his own, which are startling in themselves, and of very fice, in the city of Alexandria, Va., a valuable general application. Placing the matter TRACT of LAND and FISHERY, situate in the on purely scientific grounds, the distinguish- county and state aforesaid, on the Potomac river, ed chemist lays down the incontrovertible proposition, which every farmer knows by experience to be true of his own farm, that if crops are taken from land for a series of years without restoring to the and eighteen months, with interest from the day soil the elements of which it is thus of sale, the purchaser giving bond, with good perdeprived, the land will become impoverish- senal security, for the deferred payments, and the ed and its yield will begin to diminish .-- title to be retained until the whole purchase mo-This proposition Liebig proceeds to apply, new shall be paid, the same being liable to be reboth to England herself and to the countries upon which she depends for agricultural supplies. Of all that is drawn from the soil and carried into the cities in the shape of corn or meat, little or nothing is returned to the fields; this process of exhaustion is incessant, and is counteracted only by the importation of substances containing the requisite elements for the production of food-like bones and guano. The moment, therefore, this supply falls off, England must either see a constantly-diminishing return from her soil, arising from no economical law as to the ratio between labor and production, but from pure exhaustion, or she must in some the Mayor, Board of Aldermen and Board of Comway begin to economise the waste of agricultural wealth, now suffered by the loss of the sewerage from her cities, by which a large part of what is drawn from the soil is swept ary, 1860, at 12 o'clock, M., in front of the Mayinto the sea. Germany, from which Eng- er's Office, in the City of Alexandria, sell at public land has in great part obtained her supply auction, FOUR HUNDRED AND SEVENTYof bones, is beginning to perceive the value of SEVEN SHARES OF THE CAPITAL STOCK this material for her own use, and this TURNPIKE COMPANY. The whole stock of this supply must be regarded as at an end. The supply of guano, it is estimated, will be ex-

The application of this principle to the countries from which England draws her agricultural imports, was only incidentally necessary for Liebig's purpose, but is equally important. It is obvious that their suply, since they not only waste but export; and thus the time may be foreseen when with them population will press close-ly upon production, and when England must look for a diminution of her supplies from abroad, as well as of her own product. Germany already feels the effect of constant exportation, for she is now forced to import manures in order keep her crops up to their former mark; and what is true of Germany tries which have produced corn for other lands have remained corn markets, and England has contributed her full share towards rendering unproductive the best lands of the United States, which have supplied her with wore out the wheat lands of New York, of the West and of Virginia. This at once suggests the necessary extension of the principle affirmed by Leibig to other crops besides food crops,—to tobacco, hemp, cotton and wool, to everything which is cultivated and exported without a due return to the soil. Our fields may seem exhaustless both in extent and fertility, but says Leibig, and with the approval of common sense, a well which receives no supply, must finally be emptied by constant pumping, however deep it may be, and there are many sections of the United States which have already bitterly tested the application of this tamiliar truth. The United States as well as Great Britain may lay to heart the warning of the great agricultural chemist, given in the following

"I know that the prophets of future evil have at all times been derided by their own generation, but if history and natural law can furnish any ground whatever for a just conclusion, then there is none which stands upon a firmer basis than this: That if the British people do not take the pains to secure the natural conditions of the permanent fertility of their land, if they allow these conditions as hitherto to be squander-ed, their fields will at no distant day cease them respectively for the year 1859, with costs to yield their returns of corn and meat .-Every man may picture to himself the state of things which will then gradually arise; but it does not belong to the province of nat- To whom assessed, and desural science to decide the question whether the might and strength and independence of the nation can be maintained when this state of things shall have arisen.
